I have a stored procedure that has a select statement that joins a couple of tables. I'm calling this stored procedure several times using SP and returning a table. The problem is that database is getting filled with select queries after few hours. I assume because it's not caching the data returned by the stored procedure. Is there any mechanism in ASP.NET to cache the results from a stored procedure? A: Calling the SP with Nhibernate doesn't work? Are you basically asking how to cache a data set? If so, look at the .NET cache. If you are using an ORM look at the options of what is cached in the mapping configuration.
