You can crop, rotate, adjust color, and apply special effects. You can manipulate your layer content, such as change the opacity of an object in the image to make it more or less visible, by using the opacity mask. To help you get up to speed quickly in Photoshop, here's a quick rundown of the most useful features: * **Adjustment layers:** Adjustment layers give you access to many adjustments, including corrections for color, lighting, and exposure. You can also add a shadow to an Adjustment layer to adjust light in the image. These adjustment layers work like a separate layer, appearing on top of your image just like any other image layer. By applying the same effect to many different adjustment layers, you can make one adjustment, as outlined in Chapter 6, apply to several areas of the image. Then you can fine-tune the effect to match your final result. * **Adjustment sliders:** Adobe calls this feature a collection of tools that enable you to adjust color, contrast, and color saturation or lightness. You choose a range of values for these options and you click the range, and the values appear in the main window. For example, the Hue/Saturation dialog box, shown in Figure 5-1, lets you change the overall tone and look of the image. If your image looks too green, then you can drag the Hue slider to the right. * **Adjustment brushes:** Photoshop's brush tools enable you to paint color or effects over your image. You can easily alter the type, size, color, and opacity of the brush with a single click. Figure 5-1: The Hue/Saturation dialog box enables you to change the tone, saturation, and color of your image. You can also use this dialog box as a color editor. To find the color eyedropper tool, click the eyedropper tool icon to the left of the slider controls. The eyedropper enables you to sample a color

(Photo by Ahmad Masood/Reuters) The US has imposed sanctions on Russia, China, Iran and North Korea for having carried out some of the worst atrocities, says a statement by the State Department. The measures were issued after the four nations were found to be in violation of six UN Security Council resolutions, the department said. The sanctions include a ban on the export of certain military-related technology and the importation of arms and munitions. The sanctions on the four nations include a ban on the export of certain military-related technology and the importation of arms and munition. (Photo by AFP) As a result of the sanctions, the US will also require the four nations to contribute towards the preservation of nuclear material in their territory. "Russia, China, Iran, and North Korea maintain large arsenals of chemical and biological weapons, as well as long-range delivery systems. They have threatened to use these weapons to attack the United States and our allies," the statement said. "Each of these nations denies allegations made against them by the US, but the evidence showing their grave violations of international law is overwhelming and well-documented," it added. While Russia is accused of providing advanced weapons to Syrian government forces during the ongoing civil war, China has been found to be in violation of the Iran nuclear agreement and North Korea is accused of repeatedly testing ballistic missiles. Lakers called on to lift mini era to boost morale IT IS a ridiculously small and insignificant matter, and probably won't even make the news. For a few days around the mid-term mark of the 2009-10 campaign, the West Coast Eagles wore small green and gold numbers on their guernseys. They wore black and red for the rest of the year. The number was partly a "personal" issue for coach Mick Malthouse, as he had previously worn the number himself while playing in an emergency injury replacement game against the Eagles while sidelined from the 1994 season. Football people everywhere – from TV commentators to the social media-magnates – love a bit of trivia like that.

of this. The first two games in the franchise have been mentioned." [The sequel to The Legend of Korra on Nickelodeon will feature George Takei and the voices of Jeffrey Tambor and Dave Mirra. I guess that means we're getting a story about the original Korrs. Maybe that will be the theme?] "There is no plan," Tippett said, "but I did promise that I will reveal the answer, whether it is one or ten games, next summer." Tippett did mention about the possibility of other formats, not just the confirmed ones, but that's not really an answer, seeing how the last time he was asked that question, five years ago, he had a pretty good idea of how the current console generation was going to end up: "It seems like any console that comes along is going to be able to easily support more than a dozen games, so in some ways we're already at the console generation where we're now going to be at in five years." As for what it'll look like when the answer arrives, Tippett said that he hadn't really thought of how they'll get there. "We'll figure out some way to explain how it's done in an entertaining and appealing way. But I don't have it in my head right now exactly what that way is." As for a possible release date, it's still TBA, but Tippett did say that it'll definitely be on an Xbox — that's at least a safe bet. Tippett also talked about how he would go about choosing the people who will be featured in the voice-cast. Since he has plenty of ties to the Star Trek universe, he asked the fans for suggestions, which he says he used. Then he could go to the various voice actors and ask them for their thoughts as well. Tippett himself was surprised how many people were willing to do it, as he says, "I expected at most maybe two or three to do it. So that says a lot about the franchise." What did the fans suggest?
