Tagore Madhu's Guru (2004) - IMDB - Andy Neel.A simple and easy to use tool to calculate the energy demands of daily living at the household level: the Calorimetric-Domestic Measurement (CALDROM) method. Energy consumption is a key concept in developing policies to promote environmental sustainability and the prevention of climate change. To assess how domestic energy use affects sustainable development, the energy demand of daily living in households should be measured. However, energy use for domestic activities is seldom measured, especially in developing countries such as Japan. The authors developed a new tool to measure the domestic energy demand (CALDRUM method). CALDRUM estimates the energy demand of daily living for adults and children aged 10-15 and 15-18 years, respectively. To validate CALDRUM, the actual energy use was measured for 20 households at two different temperature conditions (26°C and 29°C). The energy demand and energy source of the households were estimated from household members' activities. The actual energy use was measured by a hand-held energy monitor. The correlation coefficients between estimated and actual energy use were 0.93 for adults and 0.95 for children. The energy demand and energy sources estimated from CALDRUM were similar to those measured by hand-held energy monitors. The correlation between the CALDRUM-estimated energy consumption and measurements of similar energy consumption from the literature was high for both adults (0.99) and children (0.96). At 26°C, energy use was higher for adults than for children, and household members' activities contributed about 70% 648931e174
