A perfect example of why I love these movies is what happens to Joe in his final showdown with Glock. The scene starts as a standard battle with Joe mixing up his ninja moves with some interesting kung fu to fool the bad guys. Thats when Joe makes his first mistake. He hesitates. He lets Glock get in a good shot. And hes wrong for his next one. He makes a terrible mistake with a single punch which sends Glock into a wall. Joe lands on top of Glock who cuts his own left wrist on a shuriken which is inserted into his own body and slips away. Before Joe can stand, he holds his wounded wrist and moves around Glock to apply pressure. He holds it in place and summons some power to drive his thumb forward into Glock. Then he splits Glock in two. Now he can run out the scene. He stops the bad guys, summons a bunch more power, and then thanks Tetsu for giving him a hand. It all happens in slow motion and its one of the most incredible final blows Ive ever seen on film, but its also the perfect way to end the movie, to leave the viewer feeling that Joe and Hiro did it. There are a few other things that worked in this one. Miyagi and Morita are a lovely team, and theres no denying that they are a sight to see when theyre striking moves on screen. The production values are a joy to watch. Joes and Hiro's visit the ruins of another countries, and they look so real. They make for a fantastic set. The fights and tricks are works of art, as are the kung fu and ninjitsu. And this is a great film. Its a throwback to the Jackie Chan years, and I hope to see more in the future. I want more action, more ninjas, more philosophy, and more Miyagi. And more 80s action.

Bradley clearly did as much as he could with the character of Bradley, and its a shame because his bantering with Reyes was one of my favorite aspects of 4. Don the Dragon Wilson, as Bradley, is not nearly as good as Bradleys role here as he was in the same role in Ninja III The Domination. He seems to go from character to character in what little screen time he has, and Bradleys character becomes more than a little generic in the latter films. I liked the intent of 4 better than 3. Its cheaper, smaller scale. The action is more zen, and the focus remains on Bradley vs. the bad guys in the narrative. But there are just too many kinds of bad guys and too many quick cuts for the story to progress too quickly. There was no reason for the ninjas to be on an island all that time, and that time wasnt needed in the first place. Bradley doesnt get to put a beating on Tetsuo, because he needs to be picked up by the Coast Guard and shipped back to the mainland to be on the winning team of alien hunters from the movie Innerspace. But in some ways this film still doesnt have enough of a story to be worth it. Its hard to decide if its a fun adventure or just a goofy turkey at times.
