Rowan and Martin Wood are high-school graduates who are returning from China because their fathers have been awarded a government contract to re-establish the Chinese Railway System. Their trip to their fathers country takes them across the Himalayan mountains, where they fall in love with each other and a struggling family of Tibetan refugees. Over the years, Americans have celebrated the home as a venue for republican virtue, religious observance, and the development of the family. But they have also been wary of the possibilities for abuse and exploited the home as a breeding ground of instability and cultural deviancy. For much of the nineteenth century, homes, factories, and other such institutions were distant from public scrutiny and control. Buildings were often erected on public land, but were often under the oversight of city hall. The home was under the supervision of the church and the local community. It was a rarely discussed and rarely regulated space. Industrialization, however, changed the nature of home and family. Whereas during the nineteenth century industry and work were isolated in industrial and commercial districts, the city itself was organized around home and family, a proximity that was often a source of instability and deviance. President Teddy Roosevelt's term as president of the United States began with the jubilant, optimistic mood of most Americans following World War I and the death of John F. Kennedy two decades later, but if there is a silver lining in the president's legacy, it is that it signaled a second wave of reform in the United States that began with his presidency and continues today.

one of my sisters is a very good artist. she used to paint all the time in the house. she would paint on the floors or the walls. my mother was very particular about the way things looked and the way people behaved. she used to spend a lot of time on cleaning and polishing the furniture and the floors. at one time, the whole family was always cleaning and polishing. families are the building blocks of society.

they are the very reason our society works, and it is important for us to understand and appreciate this part of our history. when we have an understanding of the family, it is easier to understand the culture and the way things have happened in the past. its the history of the americas. its not because i am some great person that i want to talk about this, its because i have an obligation to my family and to my society to teach them about our culture. in may, giancarlo gucci was named honorary president of the company, a move that looks like a lifetime achievement award but was actually given to keep him in the family. the guccis are the last family-owned and -run luxury goods company, and the decision to name giancarlo as an honorary president was largely made by paolo. after that, the company will also be run by the north american division, with paolo as president, and roberto as ceo. soon, the guccis have had enough of the life of luxury, and they are leaving the mansion in florence, which they purchased from the borgias, to their three children. gucci recently took out a 3.8 million-euro mortgage to buy a new three-bedroom apartment in the port city of ancona. the family left the family castle in san giovanni, in the province of perugia, to their cousins. 5ec8ef588b
